

WHAT DOES A CREDIT UNION DO?

Let's pretend you're on a shopping trip with your mom or dad. First stop, the grocery store. That's where you buy milk and bread. Next stop, the gas station. That's where your parents fill up the gas tank. Last stop, the credit union. Do you know what happens inside a credit union?

A credit union is a place where adults and kids keep their money. When you put money into a credit union, that's called a deposit. The people who work at the credit union make sure your deposit goes to the right place. Then, the credit union's computer system keeps track of how much money is in your account. And the best part: The credit union pays you for keeping your money in a savings account. That's called dividends. The longer you keep it there, the more dividends you can earn.

The credit union helps members manage money in lots of ways, including:

- Saving money in a savings account — and earning dividends.
- Keeping money safe so it doesn't get lost or stolen.
- Keeping track of money and paying bills.
- Borrowing money for big things like a house or a car.
